Engineering at the University.
The School of Applied Science of the University of Oklahoma is a school for the higher education of young men in engineering. Its course of instruction includes electrical, civil, mechanical and chemical engineering and is based upon drawing, mathematics, mechanics, physics, chemistry, and shop practice.

In the modern technical school the student is first made acquainted with the theory of principles and then in the shops and laboratories he verifies this theory. The theoretical and textbook work is supplemented by experiment and investigations in the laboratories. The student thus cultivates the essentials of a good engineer: accuracy and clearness of thought.

The performance of laboratory experiments with all the apparatus assembled ready to hand and all directions explicitly given, though usually called practical, have really little of practice in them. In actual practice the engineer is confronted with difficulties which he can overcome by a knowledge of underlying principles and the ability to assemble his own apparatus. The laboratory and shop equipment of the university is planned to illustrate the fundamental principles and to train the student to solve whatever practical problems he may meet in the course of his career.

BUSY SESSION OF COUNCIL

All City Dads Present--Several Ordinances Adopted--A New Night Watchman--Other Business.

Every member of the city council was present at the regular meeting Monday night and an unusual volume of business was transacted.

Three ordinances, for some time pending, went to the third reading and were duly passed. One regulates the conduct of transfer men at the depots; another affects sanitation, prohibiting spitting on sidewalks and the drinking of intoxicants in stairways and other more or less public places; the third makes it unlawful to maintain screens in the front of drink joints.

Bills aggregating about $1,200 were passed on favorably. This batch includes the cost of the new water works pumps, which was allowed, less the expenses of councilman Timberlake who had to be sent East by the council in order to hasten the long-delayed shipment.

There was read an invitation from the mayor of Muskogee to the local city officials to attend a state conference on municipal problems, which will be held in that city Nov. 25-6. It was the sense of the body that Mayor Barton attend and represent the city of Ada at this important gathering.

A. L. Beck, president of the cement company, made formal complaint of the tardiness with which the new water works is being completed, explaining how the delay had discommoded seriously the cement plant, dependent as it is on the city's water supply. Councilman Markham was deputized to visit the reservoir early in the morning and investigate the situation. After investigating, he reports that the work men faithfully promise to have the plant finished after two days' more work.

George Culver's resignation as nightwatchman was read and accepted. The other like position has been vacant some time. In all there were eight applicants for the two jobs, but in the balloting only three, viz: Lee West, Tom Rye and Joe Landers, got votes. After several ballots Lee West was chosen for the first position then Tom Rye was appointed for the other vacancy by unanimous vote.

The finance committee was directed to take steps to build a residence near the pumping station for the water works engineer.

State Departments Being Rapidly
Organized--Supreme Court Starts
the Judicial Machinery.

Guthrie, Ok., Nov. 18.—Judges from the twenty-two judicial districts in Oklahoma were in conference with the State Supreme court today regarding the term times. The Court made orders setting the terms entirely upon recommendation of Judges. Some of the districts have a special term at once running from four days to two weeks, others will go into long term at once and proceed with the business to practice. The court will name a bar commission, consisting of eleven members, to examine and recommend attorneys. All attorneys who applied for admittance were required to take the oath heretofore administered with a declaration to support the constitution of Oklahoma. As yet no ruling has been made with reference to fees, but it is probable that attorneys admitted to practice in the Court of Appeals

APPOINTMENTS FOR THE ADA DISTRICT

Methodist Conference of Durant Closes Most Prosperous Year.

Durant, Ok., Nov. 19.—The Oklahoma conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, closed its sixty-second annual session here yesterday. The conference was handsomely entertained by the citizens of this city. The year just closed with the session has been most prosperous to the church in this conference. There has been a progressive and general advance in all line of church interest with the future still broadening and growing brighter for greater achievements by the Methodist Episcopal church, South.

Many reports were made and resolutions adopted in the closing hours.

This conference has 12,449 church and 31,391 Sunday school members.

Bishop Joseph S. Key announced the Oklahoma Methodist annual conference appointments.

Following are the appointments for the Ada District:

S. F. Goddard, Presiding Elder.
Ada station, T. L. Rippey; Ada north side, to be supplied; Wewoka station, C. B. Campbell; Earlboro and Seminole, J. D. Canaday; Kanawa circuit, E. Hensley, supply; Ross station, J. E. Disch; Sulphur, First church, T. P. Turner; Sulphur, Vinita Avenue Moss Weaver; Hickory circuit, S. H. Berry, supply; Mill Creek and Ravia, W. F. Jordan; Hyars circuit, E. M. Lemming, W. W. Marrs, supernumerary; Moral circuit, A. G. White; Wanette circuit, J. W. Fulton; Asher station, D. A. Williams; Maud circuit, Vada Davis; Coalgate and Wapanucka, F. E. Shanks; Stonewall circuit, J. R. Brooks; Pontotoc circuit, C. A. Martin; Tishomingo and Milburn, J. W. Head; Twelve Mile Prairie circuit, E. M. Garrett.

WILL NOT CONTEST CARTER.

No Says Republican Chairman Perry.

Coalgate, Okla., Nov. 19.—A. E. Perry, chairman of the republican congressional committee for the Fourth district, denies the report that L. G. Disney of Atoka, defeated republican candidate for congress, would contest the election of C. D. Carter, democrat, of Ardmore. He also says that the report that the contest would be made on the grounds that Carter is not a legal citizen because of Indian blood was chimerical and absolutely without foundation. He said:

"Carter was elected by a big majority of the qualified voters. Disney and the republican contingent were defeated, and I state emphatically that there will be no contest. I would like to add that I have the deepest regard for the elected candidate. He is a highly respected citizen, capable and fearless, and will do much for the new state in the national congress."

SEGREGATED MINERAL LANDS.

Special Commission Has Made No Decision.

Guthrie, Ok., Nov. 19.—The special commission appointed by President Murray of the constitutional convention to investigate the segregated mineral lands of the Indian Territory and report to the first legislature upon the advisability in the new state purchasing the same from the Indians, has as yet formulated no part of its finding. The commission proposes to make a personal investigation of the lands and await for some report from the Federal government which is now making an investigation with a diamond drill. T. J. Leahy of Pawhuska is chairman of the board and J. H. Chambers is secretary.

Have No Hope for Cross.
Oklahoma City, Ok., Nov. 18.—Morphine and strychnine injections were resorted to today by the attending physicians at the bedside of Secretary of State Wm. Cross in an effort to prolong the life of the sufferer. The attending physicians have but little hope of his recovery. Tonight he is in a very weakened condition. He has suffered two very serious relapses and remains in an unconscious condition practically all the time. No sign of improvement is shown in his condition since early morning. F. R. Cross, a brother, and his sister, who reside in New York City, were telegraphed for today.

All work done by me is guaranteed to be the best. B. C. BERRY.

First Birth in New State.
Sapulpa, Ok., Nov. 19.—Sapulpa claims the honor of the birthplace of the first child born in the state after the signing of the statehood proclamation by President Roosevelt. Ten minutes after the signing of the proclamation Mrs. R. C. Kinnaird gave birth to a fifteen-pound daughter. Mr. Kinnaird says it is the largest girl ever born in Sapulpa. Citizens are arranging to present the young miss with an appropriate present, and a photograph will be sent to President Roosevelt.

ANNOUNCING THE DEPUTIES.

preme court of Oklahoma will not be required to pay another fee. All licensed lawyers will not be re-examined. The bar commission will have supervision of these matters as soon as it is appointed and organized.

The court, sitting as a board of directors of the library, organized by electing Jesse D. Dunn chairman and Judge Turner secretary. The court adjourned to meet on the first Monday in December unless sooner convened by the chief justice.

At the governor's office today the appointment of S. O. Dawes of Washita county as state librarian was announced. Mr. Dawes has been in Oklahoma for eleven years, coming here from Wise county, Texas. He is an experienced member of the Territorial Farmers' union. W. T. Fields of El Reno was made marshal of the supreme court. W. H. L. Campbell, clerk of the court, has appointed Mitchell Bonner of Ardmore office deputy, and Jap Peddicord of Oklahoma City, journal clerk.

Gov. Haskell was in Muskogee today addressing the Trans-Mississippi commercial congress, but is expected here tomorrow. He will issue a Thanksgiving proclamation for Nov. 28 to serve in lieu of the one issued by Gov. Frantz before the latter retired from office. The reason assigned by the new executive is because the proclamation of Frantz only served for that portion of the state which was Oklahoma. Under the new order, Indian Territory portion will be given an opportunity to render thanks as well. This will be the first proclamation of the kind in its history.

From the governor's office the appointment of A. S. Wyley of Tahlequah to be a member of the board of regents of the normal schools, was announced. Mr. Wyley was a member of the constitutional convention. In the absence of Secretary of State Cross, who lies critically ill in Oklahoma City, C. H. Filson, retiring Territorial secretary, did not turn over the records today. Ed Trapp relieved J. E. Dyche of Lawton as state auditor and Peter Hanratty of McAlester took charge of the oil inspection department. T. D. Kelley of Oklahoma City was named as assistant oil inspector and Ira Gibbons of Tulsa and B. J. Claridy of Shawnee were appointed district deputies.

There are about forty inspectors to be named. There is a fee amounting to $25 per car for inspecting. Insurance Commissioner McComb has appointed H. O. Stark of Oklahoma City as his first assistant. Mr. Stark formerly published the Gazette at Jacksboro, Tex.

The department of education was taken over today by S. M. Barrett of Lawton and W. L. Ross, Edmond, appointees of Supt. Cameron. Mr. Ross is a native of Arkansas, and came to Oklahoma from Waco, Tex., where he was attached to the staff of the Texas Christian University. The educational department will probably arrange for a meeting of the county superintendents at an early date.

The school land department was closed today, pending a reorganization of the department under the new state government. Secretary of this board has not been named by Gov. Haskell, and it is probable, that nothing can be done until an appointment is made. The affairs of the office are checked and ready for the new officials. Secretary Wenner, the retiring secretary, posted a notice on the office door this morning that for the present no business would be transacted, but that as soon as the affairs were arranged under the new administration, business would proceed as usual.

Gov. Haskell has named F. B. Lillie of Guthrie and W. T. Dodd of Caddo on the state pharmaceutical board; Almont C. Hixson of Guthrie, A. E. Bonnell of Muskogee and W. N. Bryan of Claremore on the state dental examining board; A. E. Davenport of Tishomingo on the state board of health, and the following to compose the state board of agriculture: J. P. Connors of Pittsburg county, president; Joseph P. Roetz of Blaine county, R. F. Williams of McCurtain county, D. N. Robb of Atoka county, J. C. Elliott of Garvin county, Daniel Diehl of Kiowa county, G. T. Bryan of Noble county, R. S. Burns of Dewey county, Ewers White of Pottawatomie county, R. P. Lindsay of Mayes county, and S. D. Dennis of Lincoln county. It is understood that Roy Waugh of Shawnee will be secretary of the board, succeeding C. A. McNabb of Oklahoma City, present incumbent.

A Hard Debt to Pay.

"I owe a debt of gratitude that can never be paid off," writes G. S. Clark, of Westfield, Iowa, "for my rescue from death, by Dr. King's New Discovery. Both lungs were so seriously affected that death seemed imminent, when I commenced taking New Discovery. The ominous dry, hacking cough quit before the first bottle was used, and two more bottles made a complete cure." Nothing has ever equalled New Discovery for coughs, colds and all throat and lung complaints. Guaranteed by F. Z. Holley and G. M. Ramsey, druggists. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

A tickling cough from any cause, is quickly stopped by Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. And it is so thoroughly harmless and safe, that Dr. Shoop tells mothers everywhere to give it without hesitation, even to very young babies. The wholesome green leaves and tender stems of a lung healing mountainous shrub, furnish the curative properties to Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. It calms the cough, and heals the sore and sensitive bronchial membranes. No opium, no chloroform, nothing harsh used to injure or suppress. Simply a resinous plant extract, that helps to heal aching lungs. The Spaniards call this shrub which the Doctor uses "The Sacred Herb." Demand Dr. Shoop's. Take no other. Sold by G. M.

Rheumatism

I have found a tried and tested cure for Rheumatism! Not a remedy that will straighten the distorted limbs of chronic cripples, nor turn bony growths back to flesh again. That is impossible. But I can now surely kill the pains and pangs of this deplorable disease.
In Germany—with a Chemist in the City of Darmstadt—I found the last ingredient with which Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Remedy was made a perfected, dependable prescription. Without that last ingredient I successfully treated many, many cases of Rheumatism; but now, at last, it uniformly cures all curable cases of this heretofore much dreaded disease. These mud-like granular wastes, found in Rheumatic Blood, seem to dissolve and pass away under the action of this remedy as freely as does sugar when added to pure water. And then, when dissolved, these poisonous wastes freely pass from the system, and the cause of Rheumatism is gone forever. There is now no real need—no actual excuse to suffer longer without help. We sell, and in confidence recommend

DR. DAVENPORT APPOINTED.

Fight Among Neighbors Loses Leading Doctor and Democrat of Pontotoc County a High Position.

The News staff could not feel other than delighted that their boyhood and life-long friend, Dr. A. E. Davenport of Tishomingo has received the appointment by Gov. Haskell of State Medical Examiner. This appointment will reflect most creditably on the administration for Dr. Davenport is recognized as a leading physician and surgeon and known by the News to be a pure and unadulterated gentleman. Locally and among the state democratic leaders, it is known that Dr. Ligon, a leading physician and democrat of Pontotoc county, through the influence of a large number of strong friends had all but secured this appointment of State Medical Examiner when through the protest of State Senator R. M. Roddie, against Dr. Ligon's appointment and advocacy of the appointment of another Ada physician Dr. Faust, Governor Haskell decided to leave Pontotoc county and the appointment of the Tishomingo friend was the result.

BATTLE BETWEEN BLIND MEN

THE ONE WHO COULDN'T SEE AT ALL TAKES THE REST OF THE HOUSEHOLD TO A CLEANING—PISTOLS AND BIG KNIFE FIGURE.

About 2:30 Tuesday afternoon great excitement prevailed in the region of East Main street. It was occasioned by a dangerous duel between two blind men.

John R. Osborne, who is totally blind resides in that section and is head of a household, most of whose members are either blind or partially so. It seems John's domestic relations have not been very harmonious and today the discord between himself and wife broke out afresh, when his step son-in-law, Tom Gwin, butted in. John says he then ordered Gwin to leave the place, and upon his failure so to do, John went after him, beating him up and shooting twice for the purpose of scaring him off. John says Tom can see some, and struck him with a heavy cane, and that he shot to keep Tom off him.

At any rate two shots were fired which took effect in the stone pipe, and when officers arrived John was standing in the door, revolver in hand, full master of the situation, and Tom was pretty badly beaten up. The whole neighborhood was out "rubbering" but all feared to go near for fear of a blind bullet. Deputy Sheriff Geo. Conner and City Officer Lee West made the arrests. They found on the person of John or nearby, two revolvers and a long bladed knife.

Tom's wife, at the beginning of hostilities, ran madly down town in quest of the officers, so it is said that Mrs. Osborne is the only real good-eye witness of the affray.

The blind shootist was taken before Squire Brown and readily furnished bond for his appearance. John is somewhat of an old settler in Ada and is fairly well to do, while Tom has only been here a short time.

TO RIDE OR NOT TO RIDE.

London Undecided Whether It Is Good Form to Use Motor Cab.

It has not been decided whether it is good form or bad to use the motor cab. Such a decision does not matter one atom, but the verdict will have to come.

The penny 'bus and the twopenny tube are, of course, quite smart, but that must be because the bishops have taken to using them. Disraeli, it has been said, made the fortune of the hansom when he called it the gondola of London.

Yet the duchess of Cleveland never thought the late Lord Salisbury quite respectable, because he drove about town, not in a coach-and-six, but, as she mentioned in tones of horror, in a brougham. Herbert Spencer did no worse, except that, owning a little victoria, he joggled horse and driver.

All these equipages have some time or other to run the gauntlet of the mentors of society. The victory of the penny 'bus was the greatest democratic triumph ever won by the bench of bishops. For it was banned by bell, book and candle not so long ago.

Prof. Vambrey, when he was learning to tread the straight and narrow ways of London society, was caught by a lady riding on the top of a 'bus. "Sir," she said, when he came hum-

WHEN HE ORDERED LEMONADE.

Kansas City Residents Were Going to Shoot, Said This Writer.

The other day a man was rummaging through a second-hand book store on Twelfth street, when he came across a narrative which was written by a traveling scribe away back in '57. The historian tells of his arrival in Kansas City, and gives some details concerning the village which are very funny.

The author says that after staking out his live stock near the river, he walked into the village to see what he might see. He speedily got acquainted with the editor of the "local paper," and they repaired to a shanty made of hemlock slabs (where did the hemlock come from?) where the editor, with true journalistic courtesy, which age doth not wither nor custom stale, asked the visitor what he would have.

The latter evidently belonged to the W. C. T. U., for he called for a lemonade. Whereupon, the editor rushed him out of the place into a secluded spot, and said, hoarsely:

"Don't you know it's as much as your life is worth to ask for such a drink in this town? Three men were drawing their guns and were going to wing you when I rushed you out." This yarn is related as a fact by

IN RURAL IRELAND

The Joys of Traveling Third Class.

STROLL WITH PRETTY GIRLS

Inquiry as to Direction Leads to Pleasant Ramble Through a Park with Two Winsome Lassies—Visit a Cattle Show at Enniskillen.

By CHARLES BATTELL LOOMIS.

Enniskillen, Ireland.—In Ireland, if you wish to travel third class, it is well to get into a carriage marked "non smoking." If there is no sign on it it is a smoking compartment; quite probably, the custom here being often the direct opposite of that in Great Britain.

If you are traveling with women in the party the second class is advisable, but the third has this advantage—it saves you money that you can spend on worthless trinkets that may be confiscated by our custom house officers.

I have been ten days in the north of Ireland and I met my first drunken man in a third-class carriage.

Will the W. C. T. U. kindly make a note of this? Allow me to repeat for the benefit of those who took up the newspaper after I had begun—I have been ten days in Ireland and have traveled a-foot, a-car and on train and tram through half a dozen northern counties and have been on the outlook for picturesque sights, and I saw my first drunken man yesterday afternoon—the afternoon of the tenth day.

He was in a third-class smoking compartment and in my hurry to make my train I stepped in without noticing the absence of the sign.

He was a very old, and rather nice-looking, clean-shaven man and his instincts were for the most part of the kindest, but he would have irritated Charles Dickens exceedingly for he was an inveterate spitter, of wonderful aim, and, like the beautiful lady in the vaudeville shows whose husband surrounds her with knives without once touching her, I was surrounded but unharmed. When the old man saw my straw hat a gleam of interest came into his dull eye and he came over and sat down right opposite me.

"Are ye a Yankee?" said he. I assured him that I was. "I thought so by your hat, but you don't talk like a Yankee." So I handed him out a few "by Goshes" which he failed to recognize and told me plainly that he doubted my nationality. Except for my hat I was no Yankee. Now my hat was made in New York, but I knew that this was a subtlety that would pass him, so I again proclaimed my nationality and he asked me with great politeness if I objected to his smoking (keeping up his fusillade all the time) and I with polite insincerity told him that I didn't. For his intentions were of the kindest. I believe he would have stopped spitting if I had asked him to, but I hated to deprive so old a man of so quiet a pleasure.

The talk now turned to the condition of Ireland, and he told me in his mandarin, thickly articulated way that Ireland was on the eve of a great industrial revival. As I had repeatedly heard this from the lips of perfectly sober people I believed it. I told him that he would live to see a more prosperous Ireland.

This he refused to believe and once more asked me if I was as American as my hat. I assured him that perhaps I was even more so and that his grandchildren would surely live to see Triumphant Ireland. This he accepted gladly, and coming to his place of departure, bade me a kindly farewell and stumbled over his own feet out of the compartment. And I immediately changed to one where smoking was not allowed.

It was on the same journey that I stopped at a place called Omagh and while waiting for a connection we were at the station some time. I was reading, but suddenly became conscious that some young people were having a very happy time, for peal after peal of laughter rang through the station. After awhile I looked up and found that I was the cause of all this joy on the part of young Ireland. There were three or four girls absolutely absorbed in me and my appearance. I supposed it was again the American hat, but suddenly one of the girls "pulled a face" that I recognized as a caricature of my own none too merry countenance, and the group went off into new peals of merriment.

"How pleasant a thing it is," thought I, "that by the mere exhibition of the face nature gave me in America I can amuse perfect strangers in a far-off land," and I smiled benignantly at the young women which had the effect of nearly sending them into hysterics.

Life was a little darker for them after the train pulled out, but I could not stay in Omagh for the mere purpose of exciting their risibles by the exposition of my gloomy features.

Everywhere I go I am a marked man. I feared for a time that there was something the matter with my appearance, but at Enniskillen I fell in with a young locomotive engineer from California and he told me that he too aroused attention wherever he went and that in Cork youngsters followed him shouting "Yankee!" Fancy a "Yankee" from California!

At Enniskillen I went for a walk with this young engine driver and we passed two pretty young girls, of whom he inquired the way to the park. It seems that the young women were on their way there themselves and they very obligingly showed us how to go. It occurred to the gallant young Californian that such an exhibition of kindness was worth rewarding and he asked the ladies if they did not care to stroll through the park. They, having nothing else to do and the evening being fine, consented and we made a merry quartette.

I have been somewhat disappointed in the Irishman as a wit in my actual contact with him on his native heath, but these girls showed that wit was still to be found. They were very quick at decorous repartee and although my San Francisco friend neglected to introduce me to them (possibly because he did not know their names), I paid a tribute to their gifts of conversation.

Nor should it be imagined for a moment that they were of that sisterhood so deservedly despised by that estimable and never-to-be-too-well-thought-of Mrs. Grundy—they were simply working girls who were out for an evening stroll and who saw in a chance conversation with representatives of the extreme east and west of America an opportunity for mental improvement.

They were, it may be, unconventional, but how much more interesting are such people than those whose lives are ordered by rule.

We left the young women in the park intent upon the glories of a day that was dying hard (after 18 hours of daylight) and as we made our way to the hotel we agreed that a similar readiness to converse with strangers on the part of young women in New York would have given reasonable cause for various speculations.

But Ireland has a well-earned reputation for a certain thing, which the just published table of vital statistics for the year 1905 goes far to strengthen.

In the morning the young locomotive pusher and myself had attended a cattle show at Enniskillen fair grounds.

I don't mind saying that I had stayed over a day in order to go to the fair, for I have not read Irish literature for nothing and I was perfectly willing to see a fight and ascertain the strength of a shillelagh as compared with a Celtic skull.

It was a great day for Enniskillen and for the Enniskillen Guards, who were out in force. There were also pretty maidens from all the surrounding counties and not a few of the gentry who had been attracted by the jumping contests.

But—what a disappointment.

Irishmen? Why, you'll see more Irishmen any pleasant day below Fourteenth street in New York. And those that were there were so painfully well-behaved and quiet. And as for speaking the Irish dialect—well, I wish that some of the Irish comedians who have been persuaded that Irishmen wear green whiskers would come over here and listen to Irishmen speak. They wouldn't understand them, they speak so like other people. For ginger and noise and varied interests any New England cattle show has this one beaten to a pulp—if one may use so common an expression in a newspaper.

The noisiest things there were the bulls and they were vociferous and huge. But the men were soft spoken and there seemed little of the "Well, I swan! I hain't seen you for more'n two years. How's it goin'?" "Oh, fair to middlin'. Able to set up an eat spoon vittles" atmosphere in the place although undoubtedly it was a great gathering of people who seldom meet. Not a single side show. Not a three-card monte man or a whip seller or a vendor of non-intoxicants. Yes, there was a wagon where they sold tea.

There was just one man selling what must have been mock oranges, for such mockeries of orange groves I never saw. They were the size of peaches and the engineer told me they were filled with dusty pulp.

I bought none. The racing and fence jumping in the afternoon were interesting but there was no wild Yankee excitement on the part of the crowd and no hilarity. There was only one man that I noticed as having taken more than was necessary and the only effect it had on him was to unlock the flood gates of an incoherent eloquence that caused a great deal of amusement to those who were able to extricate a sequence of ideas from the alcoholic fumes of words.

One venerable looking man with a flowing white beard of the sort formerly worn by Americans of the requisite years fell from a fence where he was viewing the jumping and was knocked out for a time. He had been "overcome by the heat" at which, out of respect to him, I took off my overcoat. The Irish idea of heat is different from the New York one.

The splendid old fellow had served 33 years on the police force and had been a police pensioner for 31 years and as he must have been 21 when he joined the force he was upwards of 85.

Would Edward Everett Hale view a race from a picket fence? There is something in the Irish air conducive to longevity. In the evening I saw the old man standing in the doorway of a temperance hotel talking with men some 70 years younger than he. A local tradesman told me that in the town of Enniskillen where formerly any public gathering was sure to be followed by a public fight, he had seen the Catholic band and the Orangemen's band playing amicably the same tune (I'll bet it wasn't "The Wearing of the Green"), as they marched side by side on the main street.

The world do move.

FOR A FRIEND

By EMMA C. DOWD

(Copyright, by Joseph E. Davies.)

As Helen Sargent stopped singing a sweet voice from the other end of the room said: "That is a beautiful song, dearie. It seemed as if I could see the Lord riding into Jerusalem, and the people casting their garments and palm branches before Him, and hear them crying, 'Hosanna!' You make it all so real."

"I am glad you like it, grandma. I feel as if I were there myself; perhaps that is why I can make it seem real to others. I am to sing it at church to-morrow and I hope it will please my audience as well as it pleases you. But not everybody is as kind a critic as you are." Then stooping to kiss the smiling lips she sped up-stairs.

The flush that her grandmother's words had called to her cheeks had not died out, and her face reflected the pure joy that filled her heart. Helen Sargent was very lovely as she stood there thinking her happy thoughts.

Presently she turned from the window and made preparations for a walk.

As she was ushered into the parlor of her friend, Mabel Emory, she saw that another caller was before her.

"Oh, it is Millie Crawford!" she said sweetly, as she went forward to greet the girl, who had turned slightly at her approach. "I have hardly caught a glimpse of you since I came home; but we used to be good friends before I went abroad. I wish I might see more of you. I never forget old friends, Millie."

The young lady thus addressed replied somewhat stiffly to this cordial

"What Ails Millie Crawford?"

greeting and then sat awkwardly on the edge of a large chair, nervously fingering the buttons of her jacket.

"What ails Millie Crawford?" asked Helen as soon as she was alone with her friend.

Mabel blushed. "Poor Millie!" she said; "she is going through a hard place."

"Oh, I did not suppose she was in trouble! I am so sorry. I wish I could help her."

Helen's voice was very tender and sympathetic, and she looked inquiringly at Mabel, expecting something further. But Mabel only seemed confused, and she avoided her friend's direct gaze.

"I'd like to tell you—that is, perhaps it would be best," she said, finally; "but I don't think Millie would want me to speak of it."

"Then do not," Helen hastened to say. "I only wish I might be of use to her in some way."

Mabel opened her lips, as if to reply; then she closed them tightly, with a pained expression, and the pain did not wholly leave her face during her caller's stay.

On Monday morning she started for Boston on business for her grandmother. As the train stopped at a way station, Helen looked up from her book to see a rosy-cheeked, smiling woman standing opposite her in the aisle, and she moved closer to the window and took up the parcel beside her that the stranger might share her seat.

"Thank you," said the woman; "I don't see what makes the cars so crowded this mornin'. But I don't blame 'em any; it's pleasant enough to want to be goin' somewhere."

Helen nodded a smiling assent, and then resumed her reading. But in a moment she felt a soft touch on her sleeve.

"Excuse me," said her seatmate, "but I couldn't help seein' that," pointing to the ticket that lay in Helen's lap, "an' I want to know if you live in Bloxamoro."

"Yes."

"I thought so! Wal, I'm real glad. Perhaps you know a young lady by the name of Crawford?"

Helen responded in the affirmative. "Wal, ain't I in luck! You see, I live in Boston. I've been over to my married daughter's to stay all night. Her baby has got the measles, an' they thought he was goin' to die sure, an' nothin' would do but I must come right over. But he's as bright as a button this mornin', an' these wa'n't no need of my goin', only I s'pose Mary'll feel easier now. Wal, that ain't here nor there. This Miss Crawford come to my house the other day to see about hirin' some rooms for herself an' mother, an' I felt a little shaky 'bout lettin' her have 'em, seein' I didn't know nothin' whether she was reliable or not; but if you say she is, why that settles it."

Upon hearing Helen's assurance that Miss Crawford and her mother would probably be all that could be desired as tenants, the woman went on:

"I s'pose I needn't be so fussy, but I hain't lived in Boston long enough to git used to city ways, an' I'm dretful afraid I shall git took in by somebody. I thought she was all right; she seemed so pretty appearin', an' I felt real sorry for her. You see, there's a rich girl there in Bloxamoro that's been playin' the mischief with her prospects, gittin' her music scholars away from her—or no, not gittin' 'em away 'xactly, 'cause she said she didn't b'lieve she had anything to do about it, only they thought 'twas tonier to take lessons o' this big bug that had been to Europe an' had got all the new fangled notions in singin'. An' she said she spent 'most all her mother's money learnin' how to sing, an' now it wa'n't goin' to be worth much to her after all. She cried when she was tellin' me, an' I felt awful sorry for her. Oh, an' she said she had a good place in the church choir, an' she was took down with typhoid fever just before this rich I-for-get-her-name come home, an'—as luck would have it—her time run out before she got well enough to sing, an' the other girl got married, an' so they up an' hired this rich girl—they'd got to have somebody, you see, an' she was all ready an' waitin'. But she said she could 'a' stood that if she could 'a' kep' her scholars; but all her best ones went over to the other one. It does seem as if anybody'd had plenty o' money wouldn't do such things, don't it? But, there, p'rhaps you know that rich girl, too—my, I hope she ain't no friend o' yours! I never thought!"

How Helen Sargent managed to reassure her garrulous companion she hardly knew; but that the mind of the little woman was relieved of all fears was evident from the unsuspecting way in which she continued her innocent chatter about herself, her relatives, Millie Crawford and the things that made up the daily routine of her own uneventful life.

As for Helen, her brain whirled, her heart beat wildly, she felt suffocated. This, then, was the explanation of Millie's trouble, of Mabel's strange conduct—and she was the cause of it all!

Helen was glad when she bade the well-meaning little woman good-by, and she was once more left to herself. After attending to her grandmother's business she had expected to spend a few hours in shopping and paying two or three visits, but her interest in new gowns and her Boston friends was gone, and she took an early train for home.

In her own room she first dared to look at the matter squarely. It was all plain enough now, this trouble of Millie's. Mrs. Crawford was in poor health, probably not well enough to be left alone—that was why Millie had been looking for rooms in Boston. She recollected hearing Millie once say that she believed it would break her mother's heart if she should ever have to leave her own little home where she had gone as a bride, and which she loved so dearly.

Helen's form shook with suppressed sobs. She prayed and prayed for light and strength.

At last, the struggle was ended; Helen grew calm. She rose and made preparations for going down to tea. When she looked into the mirror to see if she could discover any traces of her recent tears, it was not an unhappy face that greeted her.

Two years afterwards she was returning home from Boston late one afternoon when she caught the earnest gaze of a woman across the aisle. The face had a familiar aspect, but before she could recollect where she had seen it the woman came toward her with outstretched hand.

"I do know's you know me, but I hain't forgot you—oh, now you remember!" pleased at Helen's smile of recognition. "Wal, I've looked for you ever since. Do you know, that Miss Crawford didn't come after all, an' I never knew why till a little while ago. I met her an' she told me all about it. That rich girl went off travelin', an' so she got her place in the choir back again an' her scholars an' ev'rythin'! Wasn't that nice? An' that rich girl—why, she's turned out 'most an angel! She's got piles o' money of course, but 'tain't ev'rybody 'll do things for nothin' if they have. She's givin' lessons all the time to poor girls that want to learn to sing an' can't afford to, an' she sings in prisons an' hospitals an' awful old tenement houses, an' they say she does sing beautiful. I'd just like to see her an' hear her sing; I'd walk five miles any time to do it! Oh, dear, here's Shirl-ton, and I've got to go! Won't you come an' see me sometime? I'm in the same old place. Queer, how things turn out, ain't it? Do come see me!" And Helen promised. Then the train stopped, and the nodding, smiling little woman disappeared in the crowd.

Might Get Even.

A guest at one of the summer resorts in West Virginia tells of a wedding ceremony he witnessed in the town nearby. The minister was young and easily embarrassed. It was the first wedding he had ever undertaken. The prospective bride and groom were both younger and still more easily embarrassed than he. When the minister had finished the service and muttered a few kindly but halting words to the young couple he had just united the bride looked at him, blushing but confident. "Thank yer," she said clearly. "It's shore kind o' yer to congratulate us, an' as long as you haven't ever been married yit, maybe we'll have a chance some day to retaliate."

London's Peril.

To elderly timid people London is no longer a pleasant place of residence. The streets have become a labyrinth of horror and difficulty, a region of hideous sounds and foul smells. With motor 'buses toppling over on the sidewalk, and private motors knocking down lamp posts, and impinging on the shelters, the unfortunate citizen knows not whether to wend his trembling steps.—Lady Violet Greville, in London Graphic.

Congo Wiles.

An ivory dealer uttered a cry of rage.

"Done again," he said. "Done out of $50."

And he laid aside one of the tusks from the great heap that he had been examining.

"It is ballasted with lead," he said. "That is a common Congo trick. The native, when he gets a good big tusk of 80 pounds or so, melts up 10 or 15 pounds of lead and pours it down into the tusk's hollow. He fills it, so to speak, as a dentist fills a tooth."

"We dealers know the dodge, and every tusk is gone over carefully for a lead filling. My new trader, though, is rather careless, and this is the second filled tusk that has been worked off on him in the last quarter."

The dealer's frown vanished and he smiled.

"Of course the trader, and not I, will have to stand the loss," he said.

His Mistake.

"He hasn't succeeded in his political ambitions."

"No; the trouble with him is that he apes the swell people."

"That's not the trouble. He might ape the swell people all he pleased if he didn't afterward monkey with the plain people!"—Catholic Standard and Times.

Engineering at the University
The School of Applied Science of the University of Oklahoma is a school for the higher education of young men in engineering. Its course of instruction includes electrical, civil, mechanical and chemical engineering and is based upon drawing, mathematics, mechanics, physics, chemistry, and shop practice.

In the modern technical school the student is first made acquainted with the theory of principles and then in the shops and laboratories he verifies this theory. The theoretical and text book work is supplemented by experiment and investigations in the laboratories. The student thus cultivates the essentials of a good engineer: accuracy and clearness of thought.

The performance of laboratory experiments with all the apparatus assembled ready to hand and all directions explicitly given though usually called practical have really little of practice in them. In actual practice the engineer is confronted with difficulties which he can overcome by a knowledge of underlying principles and the ability to assemble his own apparatus. The laboratory and shop equipment of the university is planned to illustrate the fundamental principles and to train the student to solve whatever practical problems he may meet in the course of his career.

BUSY SESSION OF COUNCIL

All City Dads Present--Several Ordinances Adopted--A New Night Watchman--Other Business

Every member of the city council was present at the regular meeting Monday night and an unusual volume of business was transacted.

Three ordinances for some time pending went to the third reading and were duly passed. One regulates the conduct of transfer men at the depots, another affects sanitation prohibiting spitting on sidewalks and the drinking of intoxicants in stairways and other more or less public places. The third makes it unlawful to maintain screens in the front of drink joints.

Bills aggregating about $1200 were passed on favorably. This batch includes the cost of the new water works pumps which was allowed less the expenses of councilman Timberlake who had to be sent East by the council in order to hasten the long-delayed shipment.

There was read an invitation from the mayor of Muskogee to the local city officials to attend a state conference on municipal problems which will be held in that city Nov. 25-6. It was the sense of the body that Mayor Barton attend and represent the city of Ada at this important gathering.

A. L. Beck, president of the cement company, made formal complaint of the tardiness with which the new water works is being completed, explaining how the delay had discommodated seriously the cement plant, dependent as it is on the city's water supply. Councilman Markham was deputized to visit the reservoir early in the morning and investigate the situation. After investigating he reports that the work men faithfully promise to have the plant finished after two days more work.

George Culvers resignation as nightwatch was read and accepted. The other like position has been vacant some time. In all there were eight applicants for the two jobs but in the balloting only three, viz. Lee West, Tom Rye and Joe Landers, got votes. After several ballots Lee West was chosen for the first position then Tom Rye was appointed for the other vacancy by unanimous vote. The finance committee was directed to take steps to build a residence near the pumping station for the waterworks engineer.

ANNOUNCING THE DEPUTIES.

State Departments Being Rapidly Organized--Supreme Court Starts the Judicial Machinery.

Guthrie, Ok., Nov. 18—Judges from the twenty-two judicial districts in Oklahoma were in conference with the State Supreme court today regarding the terms of the judges. The court members setting the terms entirely upon recommendation of the judges. Some of the districts have a special term at Guthrie, others will have a term at other places and some will have a term at practice. The court will name a bar commission, consisting of eleven members, to examine and recommend attorneys. All attorneys who apply for admittance were required to take the oath heretofore administered with a declaration to support the constitution of Oklahoma. As yet no ruling has been made with reference to fees, but it is probable that attorneys will be permitted to practice in the court.

APPOINTMENTS FOR THE ADA DISTRICT

Methodist Conference of Durant closes Most Prosperous Year.

Durant Ok. Nov. 19—The Oklahoma conference of the Methodist Episcopal church South closed its sixty-second annual session here yesterday. The conference was handsomely entertained by the citizens of this city. The year just closed with the session has been most prosperous to the church in this conference. There has been a progressive and general advance in all lines of church interest with the full broadening and growing of the church for greater achievements in the Methodist Episcopal church South.

Many reports were made and resolutions adopted. The closing exercises were held at the church. The conference will adjourn at 12:15 p.m. Monday morning. The following appointments for the Ada District:

S. T. Goldsby, Presiding Elder; Ada station, L. L. Hopper; Ada north side to be supplied, Wewoka station, C. L. Campbell; Earlsboro and Seminole, J. D. Canaday; Kanawha circuit, E. WILL NOT CONTEST CARTER.

No Says Republican Chairman Perry.

Copalgate, Okla., Nov. 19—A E Perry, chairman of the republican congressional committee for the Fourth district, denies the report that L. G. Disney of Atoka defeated republican candidate for congress would contest the election of C. D. Carter democrat, of Ardmore. He also says that the report that the contest would be made on the grounds that Carter is not a legal citizen because of Indian blood was chimerical and absolutely without foundation. He said:

Carter was elected by a large majority of the qualified voters. Disney and the republican contingent were defeated and I state emphatically that there will be no contest. I would like to add that I have the deepest regard for the elected candidate. He is a highly respected citizen capable and fearless and will do much for the welfare of the state in the national congress.

SEGREGATED MINERAL LANDS

Special Commission Has Made No Decision.

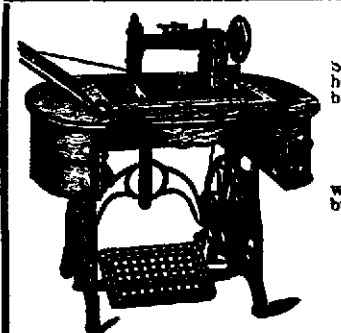

Guthrie Ok. Nov. 18—The special commission appointed by President Murray of the constitutional convention to investigate the segregated mineral lands of the Indian Territory and report to the first legislature upon the advisability in the new state purchasing the same from the Indians has as yet formulated no part of its finding. The commission proposes to make a personal investigation of the lands and await for some report from the Federal government which is now making an investigation with a diamond drill. T. J. Leahy of Pawhuska is chairman of the board and J. H. Chambers is secretary.

TO RIDE OR NOT TO RIDE.

London Undecided Whether It Is Good Form to Use Motor Cab.

It has not been decided whether it is good form or bad to use the motor cab. Such a decision does not matter one atom, but the verdict will have to come.

The penny 'bus and the twopenny 'bus are, of course, quite smart, but that must be because the bishops have taken to using them. Disraeli, it has been said, made the fortune of the hansom when he called it the gondola of London.

Yet the durbess of Cleveland never thought the late Lord Salisbury quite respectable, because he drove about town, not in a coach-and-six, but, as she mentioned in tones of horror, in a brougham. Herbert Spencer did no worse, except that, owing a little Victoria, he jobbed horse and driver.

All these equipages have some time or other to run the gauntlet of the menors of society. The victory of the penny 'bus was the greatest democratic triumph ever won by the bench of bishops. For it was banned by bell, book and candle not so long ago.

Prof. Vandery, when he was learning to tread the straight and narrow ways of London society, was caught by a lady riding on the top of a 'bus. "Sir," she said, when he came hum-

WHEN HE ORDERED LEMONADE

Kansas City Residents Were Going to Shoot, Said This Writer.

The other day a man was rummaging through a second-hand book store on Twelfth street, when he came across a narrative which was written by a traveling scribe away back in '57. The historian tells of his arrival in Kansas City, and gives some details concerning the village which are very funny.

The author says that after staking out his live stock near the river, he walked into the village to see what he might see. He speedily got acquainted with the editor of the "local paper," and they repaired to a shanty made of hemlock slabs (where did the hemlock come from?) where the editor, with true journalistic courtesy, which age doth not wither nor custom stale, asked the visitor what he would have.

The latter evidently belonged to the W. C. T. U., for he called for a lemonade. Whereupon, the editor rushed him out of the place into a secluded spot, and said, hoarsely:

"Don't you know it's as much as your life is worth to ask for such a drink in this town? Three men were drawing their guns and were going to wing you when I rushed you out." This yarn is related as a fact by

Might Get Even.

A guest at one of the summer resorts in West Virginia tells of a wedding ceremony he witnessed in the town nearby. The minister was young and easily embarrassed. It was the first wedding he had ever undertaken. The prospective bride and groom were both younger and still more easily embarrassed than he. When the minister had finished the service and muttered a few kindly but hating words to the young couple he had just united the bride looked at him, blushing but confident. "Thank you," she said clearly. "It's shore kind o' yer to congratulate us, an' as long as you haven't ever been married yit, maybe we'll have a chance some day to retaliate."

London's Peril.

To elderly timid people London is no longer a pleasant place of residence. The streets have become a labyrinth of horror and difficulty, a region of hideous sounds and foul smells. With motor buses toppling over on the sidewalk, and private motes knocking down lamp posts, and impaling on the shelters, the unfortunate citizen knows not whither to wend his trembling steps.—Lady Violet Greville, in London Graphic.

Congo Wiles.

An ivory dealer uttered a cry of rage.

"Done again," he said. "Done out of $50."

And he laid aside one of the tusks from the great heap that he had been examining.

"It is ballasted with lead," he said. "That is a common Congo trick. The native, when he gets a good big tusk of 80 pounds or so, melts up 10 or 15 pounds of lead and pours it down into the tusk's hollow. He fills it, so to speak, as a dentist fills a tooth."

"We dealers know the dodge, and every tusk is gone over carefully for a lead filling. My new trader, though, is rather careless, and this is the second filled tusk that has been worked off on him in the last quarter."

The dealer's frown vanished and he smiled.

"Of course the trader, and not I, will have to stand the loss," he said.

His Mistake.

"He hasn't succeeded in his political ambitions."

"No; the trouble with him is that he apes the swell people."

"That's not the trouble. He might ape the swell people all he pleased, if he didn't afterward monkey with the plain people!"—Catholic Standard and Times.

IN RURAL IRELAND

The Joys of Traveling Third Class.

STROLL WITH PRETTY GIRLS

Inquiry as to Direction Leads to Pleasant Ramble Through a Park with Two Winsome Lassies—Visit a Cattle Show at Enniskillen.

By CHARLES BATTALL LOOMIS.

Enniskillen, Ireland.—In Ireland, if you wish to travel third class, it is well to get into a carriage marked "non smoking." If there is no sign on it it is a smoking compartment quite probably, the custom here being often the direct opposite of that in Great Britain.

If you are traveling with women in the party the second class is advisable, but the third has this advantage—it saves you money that you can spend on worthless trinkets that may be confiscated by our custom house officers.

I have been ten days in the north of Ireland and I met my first drunken man in a third-class carriage.

Will the W. C. T. U. kindly make a note of this? Allow me to repeat for the benefit of those who took up the newspaper after I had begun—I have been ten days in Ireland and have traveled a-foot, a-car and on train and tram through half a dozen northern counties and have been on the outlook for picturesque sights, and I saw my first drunken man yesterday afternoon—the afternoon of the tenth day.

He was in a third-class smoking compartment and in my hurry to make my train I stepped in without noticing the absence of the sign.

He was a very old, and rather nice-looking, clean-shaven man and his instincts were for the most part of the kindest, but he would have irritated Charles Dickens exceedingly for he was an inveterate spitter, of wonderful aim, and like the beautiful lady in the vaudeville shows whose husband surrounds her with knives without once touching her, I was surrounded but unharmed. When the old man saw my straw hat a gleam of interest came into his dull eye and he came over and sat down right opposite me.

"Are ye a Yankee?" said he. I assured him that I was. "I thought so by your hat, but you don't talk like a Yankee." So I handed him out a few "by Goshes" which he failed to recognize and told me plainly that he doubted my nationality. Except for my hat I was no Yankee. Now my hat was made in New York, but I knew that this was a subtlety that would pass him, so I again proclaimed my nationality and he asked me with great politeness if I objected to his smoking (keeping up his fusillade all the time) and I with polite insincerity told him that I didn't. For his intentions were of the kindest. I believe he would have stopped spitting if I had asked him to, but I hated to deprive so old a man of so quiet a pleasure.

The talk now turned to the condition of Ireland, and he told me in his maudlin, thickly articulated way that Ireland was on the eve of a great industrial revival. As I had repeatedly heard this from the lips of perfectly sober people I believed it. I told him that he would live to see a more prosperous Ireland.

This he refused to believe and once more asked me if I was an American as my hat. I assured him that perhaps I was even more so and that his grandchildren would surely live to see Triumphant Ireland. This he accepted gladly, and coming to his place of departure, bade me a kindly farewell and stumbled over his own feet out of the compartment. And I immediately changed to one where smoking was not allowed.

It was on the same journey that I stopped at a place called Omagh and while waiting for a connection we were at the station some time. I was reading, but suddenly became conscious that some young people were having a very happy time, for peal after peal of laughter rang through the station. After awhile I looked up and found that I was the cause of all this joy on the part of young Ireland. There were three or four girls absolutely absorbed in me and my appearance. I supposed it was again the American hat, but suddenly one of the girls "pulled a face" that I recognized as a caricature of my own none too merry countenance, and the group went off into new peals of merriment.

"How pleasant a thing it is," thought I, "that by the mere exhibition of the face nature gave me in America I can amuse perfect strangers in a far-off land," and I smiled benignantly at the young women which had the effect of nearly sending them into hysterics.

Life was a little darker for them after the train pulled out, but I could not stay in Omagh for the mere purpose of exciting their risibles by the exposition of my gloomy features.

Everywhere I go I am a marked man. I feared for a time that there was something the matter with my appearance, but at Enniskillen I fell in with a young locomotive engineer from California and he told me that he too aroused attention wherever he went and that in Cork youngsters followed him shouting "Yankee!" Fancy a "Yankee" from California!

At Enniskillen I went for a walk with this young engine driver and we passed two pretty young girls, of whom he inquired the way to the park. It seems that the young women were on their way there themselves and they very obligingly showed us how to go. It occurred to the gallant young Californian that such an exhibition of kindness was worth rewarding and he asked the ladies if they did not care to stroll through the park. They, having nothing else to do and the evening being fine, consented and we made a merry quartette.

I have been somewhat disappointed in the Irishman as a wit in my actual contact with him on his native heath, but these girls showed that wit was still to be found. They were very quick at decorous repartee and although my San Francisco friend neglected to introduce me to them (possibly because he did not know their names), I paid a tribute to their gifts of conversation.

Nor should it be imagined for a moment that they were of that sisterhood so deservedly despised by that estimable and never-to-be-too-well-thought-of Mrs. Grundy—they were simply working girls who were out for an evening stroll and who saw in a chance conversation with representatives of the extreme east and west of America an opportunity for mental improvement.

They were, it may be, unconventional, but how much more interesting are such people than those whose lives are ordered by rule.

We left the young women in the park intent upon the glories of a day that was dying hard (after 18 hours of daylight) and as we made our way to the hotel we agreed that a similar readiness to converse with strangers on the part of young women in New York would have given reasonable cause for various speculations.

But Ireland has a well-earned reputation for a certain thing, which the just published table of vital statistics for the year 1906 goes far to strengthen.

In the morning the young locomotive pusher and myself had attended a cattle show at Enniskillen fair grounds.

I don't mind saying that I had stayed over a day in order to go to the fair, for I have not read Irish literature for nothing and I was perfectly willing to see a fight and ascertain the strength of a shillelagh as compared with a Coltic skull.

It was a great day for Enniskillen and for the Enniskillen Guards, who were out in force. There were also pretty maidens from all the surrounding counties and not a few of the gentry who had been attracted by the jumping contests.

But—what a disappointment.

Irishmen? Why, you'll see more Irishmen any pleasant day below Fourteenth street in New York. And those that were there were so painfully well-behaved and quiet. And as for speaking the Irish dialect—well, I wish that some of the Irish comedians who have been persuaded that Irishmen wear green whiskers would come over here and listen to Irishmen speak. They wouldn't understand them, they speak so like other people.

For ginger and noise and varied interests any New England cattle show has this one beaten to a pulp—if one may use so common an expression in a newspaper.

The noisiest things there were the bulls and they were vociferous and huge. But the men were soft spoken and there seemed little of the "Well, I swan!" I hadn't seen you for more'n two years. How's it goin'?" "Oh, fair to middlin'." Able to set up an eat spoon vittles' atmosphere in the place although undoubtedly it was a great gathering of people who seldom met. Not a single side show. Not a three-card monte man or a whip seller or a vendor of non-intoxicants. Yes, there was a wagon where they sold tea.

There was just one man selling what must have been mock oranges, for such mockeries of orange groves I never saw. They were the size of peaches and the engineer told me they were filled with dusty pulp. I bought none.

The racing and fence jumping in the afternoon were interesting but there was no wild Yankee excitement on the part of the crowd and no hilarity. There was only one man that I noticed as having taken more than was necessary and the only effect it had on him was to unlock the flood gates of an incoherent eloquence that caused a great deal of amusement to those who were able to extricate a sequence of ideas from the alcoholic fustian of words.

One venerable looking man with a flowing white beard of the sort formerly worn by Americans of the requisite years fell from a fence where he was viewing the jumping and was knocked out for a time. He had been "overcome by the heat" at which, out of respect to him, I took off my overcoat. The Irish idea of heat is different from the New York one.

The splendid old fellow had served 32 years on the police force and had been a police pensioner for 31 years and as he must have been 21 when he joined the force he was upwards of 85.

Would Edward Everett Hale view a race from a picket fence? There is something in the Irish air conducive to longevity. In the evening I saw the old man standing in the doorway of a temperance hotel talking with men some 70 years younger than he.

A local tradesman told me that in the town of Enniskillen where formerly any public gathering was sure to be followed by a public fight, he had seen the Catholic band and the Orangemen's band playing amicably the same tune (I'll bet it wasn't "The Wearing of the Green"), as they marched side by side to the main street.

FOR A FRIEND

By EMMA C. DOWD

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Novice.)

As Helen Sargent stopped singing a sweet voice from the other end of the room said: "That is a beautiful song, dearie. It seemed as if I could see the Lord riding into Jerusalem, and the people casting their garments and palm branches before Him, and hear them crying, 'Hosanna!' You make it all so real."

"I am glad you like it, grandma. I feel as if I were there myself; perhaps that is why I can make it seem real to others. I am to sing it at church to-morrow and I hope it will please my audience as well as it pleases you. But not everybody is as kind a critic as you are." Then stooping to kiss the smiling lips she sped up-stairs.

The flush that her grandmother's words had called to her cheeks had not died out, and her face reflected the pure joy that filled her heart. Helen Sargent was very lovely as she stood there thinking her happy thoughts.

Presently she turned from the window and made preparations for a walk.

As she was ushered into the parlor of her friend, Mabel Emory, she saw that another caller was before her.

"Oh, it is Millie Crawford!" she said sweetly, as she went forward to greet the girl, who had turned slightly at her approach. "I have hardly caught a glimpse of you since I came home; but we used to be good friends before I went abroad. I wish I might see more of you. I never forget old friends, Millie."

The young lady thus addressed replied somewhat stiffly to this cordial

"What Ails Millie Crawford?"

greeting and then sat awkwardly on the edge of a large chair, nervously fingering the buttons of her jacket.

"What ails Millie Crawford?" asked Helen as soon as she was alone with her friend.

Mabel blushed.

"Poor Millie!" she said; "she is going through a hard place."

"Oh, I did not suppose she was in trouble! I am so sorry. I wish I could help her."

Helen's voice was very tender and sympathetic, and she looked inquiringly at Mabel, expecting something further. But Mabel only seemed confused, and she avoided her friend's direct gaze.

"I'd like to tell you—that is, perhaps it would be best," she said, finally; "but I don't think Millie would want me to speak of it."

"Then do not," Helen hastened to say. "I only wish I might be of use to her in some way."

Mabel opened her lips, as if to reply; then she closed them tightly, with a pained expression, and the pain did not wholly leave her face during her caller's stay.

On Monday morning she started for Boston on business for her grandmother. As the train stopped at a way station, Helen looked up from her book to see a rosy-cheeked, smiling woman standing opposite her in the aisle, and she moved closer to the window and took up the parcel beside her that the stranger might share her seat.

"Thank you," said the woman; "I don't see what makes the cars so crowded this mornin'. But I don't blame 'em any; it's pleasant enough to want to be goin' somewhere."

Helen nodded a smiling assent, and then resumed her reading. But in a moment she felt a soft touch on her sleeve.

"Excuse me," said her seatmate, "but I couldn't help seein' that," pointing to the ticket that lay in Helen's lap, "an' I want to know if you live in Bloxamboro."

"Yes."

"I thought so! Wal, I'm real glad. Perhaps you know a young lady by the name of Crawford?"

here nor there. This Miss Crawford came to my house the other day to see about hirin' some rooms for herself an' mother, an' I felt a little shaky 'bout lettin' her have 'em, seein' I didn't know nothin' whether she was reliable or not; but if you say she is, why that settles it."

Upon hearing Helen's assurance that Miss Crawford and her mother would probably be all that could be desired as tenants, the woman went on:

"I s'pose I needn't be so fussy, but I hain't lived in Boston long enough to git used to city ways, an' I'm dretful afraid I shall git took in by somebody. I thought who was all right; she seemed so pretty appearin', an' I felt real sorry for her. You see, there's a rich girl there in Bloxamboro that's been playin' the mischief with her prospects, gittin' her music scholars away from her—or no, not gittin' 'em away 'xactly, 'cause she said she didn't believe she had anything to do about it, only they thought 'twas tonter to take lessons o' this big bug that had been to Europe an' had got all the new fangled notions in singin'."

An' she said she spent 'most all her mother's money learnin' how to sing, an' now it wa'n't goin' to be worth much to her after all. She cried when she was tellin' me, an' I felt awful sorry for her. Oh, an' she said she had a good place in the church choir, an' she was took down with typhoid fever just before this rich f-or-get-her-name come home, an'—as luck would have it—her time run out before she got well enough to sing, an' the other girl got married, an' so they up an' hired this rich girl—they'd got to have somebody, you see, an' she was all ready an' waitin'! But she said she could 'a' stood that if she could 'a' kept her scholars; but all her best ones went over to the other one. It does seem as if anybody'd had plenty o' money wouldn't do such things, don't it? But, there, p'rhaps you know that rich girl, too—my, I hope she ain't no friend o' yours! I never thought!"

How Helen Sargent managed to reassure her garrulous companion she hardly knew; but that the mind of the little woman was relieved of all fears was evident from the unsuspecting way in which she continued her innocent chatter about herself, her relatives, Millie Crawford and the things that made up the daily routine of her own uneventful life.

As for Helen, her brain whirled, her heart beat wildly, she felt suffocated. This, then, was the explanation of Millie's trouble, of Mabel's strange conduct—and she was the cause of it all!

Helen was glad when she bade the well-meaning little woman good-by, and she was once more left to herself. After attending to her grandmother's business she had expected to spend a few hours in shopping and paying two or three visits, but her interest in new gowns and her Boston friends was gone, and she took an early train for home.

In her own room she first dared to look at the matter squarely. It was all plain enough now, this trouble of Millie's. Mrs. Crawford was in poor health, probably not well enough to be left alone—that was why Millie had been looking for rooms in Boston. She recollected hearing Millie once say that she believed it would break her mother's heart if she should ever have to leave her own little home where she had gone as a bride, and which she loved so dearly.

Helen's form shook with suppressed sobs. She prayed and prayed for light and strength.

At last, the struggle was ended; Helen grew calm. She rose and made preparations for going down to tea. When she looked into the mirror to see if she could discover any traces of her recent tears, it was not an unhappy face that greeted her.

Two years afterwards she was returning home from Boston late one afternoon when she caught the earnest gaze of a woman across the aisle. The face had a familiar aspect, but before she could recollect where she had seen it the woman came toward her with outstretched hand.

"I do know's you know me, but I hain't forgot you—oh, now you remember!" pleased at Helen's smile of recognition. "Wal, I've looked for you ever since. Do you know, that Miss Crawford didn't come after all, an' I never knew why till a little while ago. I met her when she told me all about it. That rich girl went off travelin', an' so she got her place in the choir back again an' her scholars an' ev'rythin'! Wasn't that nice? An' that rich girl—why, she's turned out 'most an angel! She's got piles o' money of course, but 'tain't ev'rybody 'll do things for nothin' if they have. She's givin' lessons all the time to poor girls that want to learn to sing an' can't afford to, an' she sings in prisons an' hospitals, an' they say she does sing beautiful. I'd just like to see her an' hear her sing; I'd walk five miles any time to do it! Oh, dear, here's Shirlton, and I've got to go! Won't you come an' see me sometime? I'm in the same old place. Queer, how things turn out, ain't it? Do come see me!" And Helen promised. Then the train stopped, and the wedding, smiling little woman disappeared in the crowd.

Engineering at the University
The School of Applied Science of the University of Oklahoma is a school for the higher education of young men in engineering. Its course of instruction includes electrical, civil, mechanical and chemical engineering and is based upon drawing, mathematics, mechanics, physics, chemistry, and shop practice.

In the modern technical school the student is first made acquainted with the theory of principles and then in the shops and laboratories he verifies this theory. The theoretical and text book work is supplemented by experiment and investigations in the laboratories. The student thus cultivates the essentials of a good engineer: accuracy and clearness of thought.

The performance of laboratory experiments with all the apparatus assembled ready to hand and all directions explicitly given though usually called practical have really little of practice in them. In actual practice the engineer is confronted with difficulties which he can overcome by a knowledge of underlying principles and the ability to assemble his own apparatus. The laboratory and shop equipment of the university is planned to illustrate the fundamental principles and to train the student to solve whatever practical problems he may meet in the course of his career.

BUSY SESSION OF COUNCIL

All City Dads Present--Several Ordinances Adopted--A New Night Watchman--Other Business

Every member of the city council was present at the regular meeting Monday night and an unusual volume of business was transacted.

Three ordinances for some time pending went to the third reading and were duly passed. One regulates the conduct of transfer men at the depots, another affects sanitation prohibiting spitting on sidewalks and the drinking of intoxicants in stairways and other more or less public places. The third makes it unlawful to maintain screens in the front of drink joints.

Bills aggregating about $1200 were passed on favorably. This batch includes the cost of the new water works pumps which was allowed less the expenses of councilman Timberlake who had to be sent East by the council in order to hasten the long-delayed shipment.

There was read an invitation from the mayor of Muskogee to the local city officials to attend a state conference on municipal problems which will be held in that city Nov. 25-6. It was the sense of the body that Mayor Barton attend and represent the city of Ada at this important gathering.

A. L. Beck, president of the cement company, made formal complaint of the tardiness with which the new water works is being completed, explaining how the delay had discommodated seriously the cement plant, dependent as it is on the city's water supply. Councilman Markham was deputized to visit the reservoir early in the morning and investigate the situation. After investigating he reports that the work men faithfully promise to have the plant finished after two days more work.

George Culvers resignation as nightwatch was read and accepted. The other like position has been vacant some time. In all there were eight applicants for the two jobs but in the balloting only three, viz. Lee West, Tom Rye and Joe Landers, got votes. After several ballots Lee West was chosen for the first position then Tom Rye was appointed for the other vacancy by unanimous vote. The finance committee was directed to take steps to build a residence near the pumping station for the waterworks engineer.

APPOINTMENTS FOR THE ADA DISTRICT

Methodist Conference of Durant closes Most Prosperous Year.

Durant Ok. Nov. 19—The Oklahoma conference of the Methodist Episcopal church South closed its sixty-second annual session here yesterday. The conference was handsomely entertained by the citizens of this city. The year just closed with the session has been most prosperous to the church in this conference. There has been a progressive and general advance in all lines of church interest with the full broadening and growing of the church for greater achievements in the Methodist Episcopal church South.

Many reports were made and resolutions adopted. The closing exercises were held at 12:15 P. M. in the church.

His conference has 12,144 members, 11,111 S. D. S. in membership, 1,111 S. D. S. in membership, 1,111 S. D. S. in membership, 1,111 S. D. S. in membership.

WILL NOT CONTEST CARTER.

No Says Republican Chairman Perry.

Copalgate, Okla., Nov. 19—A E Perry, chairman of the republican congressional committee for the Fourth district, denies the report that L. G. Disney of Atoka defeated republican candidate for congress would contest the election of C. D. Carter democrat, of Ardmore. He also says that the report that the contest would be made on the grounds that Carter is not a legal citizen because of Indian blood was chimerical and absolutely without foundation. He said:

Carter was elected by a large majority of the qualified voters. Disney and the republican contingent were defeated and I state emphatically that there will be no contest. I would like to add that I have the deepest regard for the elected candidate. He is a highly respected citizen capable and fearless and will do much for the welfare of the state in the national congress.

SEGREGATED MINERAL LANDS

Special Commission Has Made No Decision.

Guthrie Ok. Nov. 18—The special commission appointed by President Murray of the constitutional convention to investigate the segregated mineral lands of the Indian Territory and report to the first legislature upon the advisability in the new state purchasing the same from the Indians has as yet formulated no part of its finding. The commission proposes to make a personal investigation of the lands and await for some report from the Federal government which is now making an investigation with a diamond drill. T. J. Leahy of Pawhuska is chairman of the board and J. H. Chambers is secretary.

At the governor's office today the appointment of S. O. Dawes of Washington county as state librarian was announced. Mr. Dawes has been in Oklahoma for eleven years coming here from Wise county, Texas. He is an ex-president of the Territorial Farmers union. W. T. Fields of El Reno was made marshal of the supreme court. W. H. L. Campbell clerk of the court has appointed Mitchell Bonner of Ardmore office deputy and Jap Paddock of Oklahoma City journal clerk.

Gov. Haskell was in Muskogee today addressing the Trans-Mississippi commercial congress, but is expected tomorrow. He will issue a Thanksgiving proclamation for Nov. 28 to serve in lieu of the one issued by Gov. Frantz before the latter's removal from office. The reason assigned by the new executive is because the proclamation of Frantz only served for that portion of the state which was Oklahoma. Under the new order Indian Territory portion will be given an opportunity to render thanks as well. This will be the first proclamation of the kind in its history.

From the governor's office the appointment of A. S. Wiley of Oklahoma to be a member of the board of regents of the normal schools was announced. Mr. Wiley was a member of the constitutional convention, in the absence of Secretary of State C. H. Brown, who has been called to the office of the sheriff's office court house and those desiring his services many find him there.

TO RIDE OR NOT TO RIDE.

London Undecided Whether It Is Good Form to Use Motor Cab.

It has not been decided whether it is good form or bad to use the motor cab. Such a decision does not matter one atom, but the verdict will have to come.

The penny 'bus and the twopenny tube are, of course, quite smart, but that must be because the bishops have taken to using them. Disraeli, it has been said, made the fortune of the hansom when he called it the gondola of London.

Yet the duchess of Cleveland never thought the late Lord Salisbury quite respectable, because he drove about town, not in a coach-and-six, but, as she mentioned in tones of horror, in a brougham. Herbert Spencer did no worse, except that, owning a little victoria, he jobbed horse and driver.

All these equipages have some time or other to run the gauntlet of the mentors of society. The victory of the penny 'bus was the greatest democratic triumph ever won by the bench of bishops. For it was banned by bell, book and candle not so long ago.

Prof. Vamberg, when he was learning to tread the straight and narrow ways of London society, was caught by a lady riding on the top of a 'bus. "Sir," she said, when he came hum-

WHEN HE ORDERED LEMONADE

Kansas City Residents Were Going to Shoot, Said This Writer.

The other day a man was rummaging through a second-hand book store on Twelfth street, when he came across a narrative which was written by a traveling scribe away back in '57. The historian tells of his arrival in Kansas City, and gives some details concerning the village which are very funny.

The author says that after staking out his live stock near the river, he walked into the village to see what he might see. He speedily got acquainted with the editor of the "local paper," and they repaired to a shanty made of hemlock slabs (where did the hemlock come from?) where the editor, with true journalistic courtesy, which age does not wither nor custom stale, asked the visitor what he would have.

The latter evidently belonged to the W. C. T. U., for he called for a lemonade. Whereupon, the editor rushed him out of the place into a secluded spot, and said, hoarsely:

"Don't you know it's as much as your life is worth to ask for such a drink in this town? Three men were drawing their guns and were going to wing you when I rushed you out."

This yarn is related as a fact by

Might Get Even.

A guest at one of the summer resorts in West Virginia tells of a wedding ceremony he witnessed in the town nearby. The minister was young and easily embarrassed. It was the first wedding he had ever undertaken. The prospective bride and groom were both younger and still more easily embarrassed than he. When the minister had finished the service and muttered a few kindly but balding words to the young couple he had just united the bride looked at him, blushing but confident. "Thank yer," she said clearly. "It's shore kind o' yer to congratulate us, an' as long as you haven't ever been married yit, maybe we'll have a chance some day to retaliate."

London's Peril.

To elderly timid people London is no longer a pleasant place of residence. The streets have become a labyrinth of horror and difficulty, a region of hideous sounds and foul smells. With motor buses toppling over on the sidewalk, and private motors knocking down lamp posts, and impinging on the shelters, the unfortunate citizen knows not whether to wend his trembling steps—Lady Viscountess, in London Graphic.

IN RURAL IRELAND

The Joys of Traveling Third Class.

STROLL WITH PRETTY GIRLS

Inquiry as to Direction Leads to Pleasant Ramble Through a Park with Two Winsome Lasses—Visit a Cattle Show at Enniskillen.

By CHARLES BATTALL LOOMIS.

Enniskillen, Ireland.—In Ireland, if you wish to travel third class, it is well to get into a carriage marked "non smoking." If there is no sign on it it is a smoking compartment quite probably, the custom here being often the direct opposite of that in Great Britain.

If you are traveling with women in the party the second class is advisable, but the third has this advantage—it saves you money that you can spend on worthless trinkets that may be confiscated by our custom house officers.

I have been ten days in the north of Ireland and I met my first drunken man in a third-class carriage.

Will the W. C. T. U. kindly make a note of this? Allow me to repeat for the benefit of those who took up the newspaper after I had begun—I have been ten days in Ireland and have traveled a-foot, a-car and on train and tram through half a dozen northern counties and have been on the outlook for picturesque sights, and I saw my first drunken man yesterday afternoon—the afternoon of the tenth day.

He was in a third-class smoking compartment and in my hurry to make my train I stepped in without noticing the absence of the sign.

He was a very old, and rather nice-looking, clean-shaven man and his instincts were for the most part of the kindest, but he would have irritated Charles Dickens exceedingly for he was an inveterate spitter, of wonderful aim, and like the beautiful lady in the vaudeville shows whose husband surrounds her with knives without once touching her, I was surrounded but unharmed. When the old man saw my straw hat a gleam of interest came into his dull eye and he came over and sat down right opposite me.

"Are ye a Yankee?" said he. I assured him that I was. "I thought so be your bat, but you don't talk like a Yankee." So I handed him out a few "by Goshes" which he failed to recognize and told me plainly that he doubted my nationality. Except for my hat I was no Yankee. Now my hat was made in New York, but I knew that this was a subtlety that would pass him, so I again proclaimed my nationality and he asked me with great politeness if I objected to his smoking (keeping up his fusillade all the time) and I with polite insincerity told him that I didn't. For his intentions were of the kindest. I believe he would have stopped spitting if I had asked him to, but I hated to deprive so old a man of so quiet a pleasure.

The talk now turned to the condition of Ireland, and he told me in his mandarin, thickly articulated way that Ireland was on the eve of a great industrial revival. As I had repeatedly heard this from the lips of perfectly sober people I believed it. I told him that he would live to see a more prosperous Ireland.

This he refused to believe and once more asked me if I was an American as my bat. I assured him that perhaps I was even more so and that his grandchildren would surely live to see Triumphant Ireland. This he accepted gladly, and coming to his place of departure, bade me a kindly farewell and stumbled over his own feet out of the compartment. And I immediately changed to one where smoking was not allowed.

It was on the same journey that I stopped at a place called Omagh and while waiting for a connection we were at the station some time. I was reading, but suddenly became conscious that some young people were having a very happy time, for peal after peal of laughter rang through the station. After awhile I looked up and found that I was the cause of all this joy on the part of young Ireland. There were three or four girls absolutely absorbed in me and my appearance. I supposed it was again the American bat, but suddenly one of the girls "pulled a face" that I recognized as a caricature of my own none too merry countenance, and the group went off into new peals of merriment.

"How pleasant a thing it is," thought I, "that by the mere exhibition of the face nature gave me in America I can amuse perfect strangers in a far-off land," and I smiled benignly at the young women which had the effect of nearly sending them into hysterics.

Life was a little darker for them after the train pulled out, but I could not stay in Omagh for the mere purpose of exciting their risibles by the exposition of my gloomy features.

Everywhere I go I am a marked man. I feared for a time that there was something the matter with my appearance, but at Enniskillen I fell in with a young locomotive engineer from California and he told me that he too aroused attention wherever he went and that in Cork youngsters followed him shouting "Yankee!" Fancy a "Yankee" from California!

At Enniskillen I went for a walk with this young engine driver and we passed two pretty young girls, of whom he inquired the way to the park. It seems that the young women were on their way there themselves and they very obligingly showed us how to go. It occurred to the gallant young Californian that such an exhibition of kindness was worth rewarding and he asked the ladies if they did not care to stroll through the park. They, having nothing else to do and the evening being fine, consented and we made a merry quartette.

I have been somewhat disappointed in the Irishman as a wit in my actual contact with him on his native heath, but these girls showed that wit was still to be found. They were very quick at drollous repartee and although my San Francisco friend neglected to introduce me to them (possibly because he did not know their names), I paid a tribute to their gifts of conversation.

Nor should it be imagined for a moment that they were of that sisterhood so deservedly despised by that estimable and never-to-be-too-well-thought-of Mrs. Grundy—they were simply working girls who were out for an evening stroll and who saw in a chance conversation with representatives of the extreme east and west of America an opportunity for mental improvement.

They were, it may be, unconventional, but how much more interesting are such people than those whose lives are ordered by rule.

We left the young women in the park intent upon the glories of a day that was dying hard (after 18 hours of daylight) and as we made our way to the hotel we agreed that a similar readiness to converse with strangers on the part of young women in New York would have given reasonable cause for various speculations.

But Ireland has a well-earned reputation for a certain thing, which the just published table of vital statistics for the year 1906 goes far to strengthen.

In the morning the young locomotive pusher and myself had attended a cattle show at Enniskillen fair grounds.

I don't mind saying that I had stayed over a day in order to go to the fair, for I have not read Irish literature for nothing and I was perfectly willing to see a fight and ascertain the strength of a shillelagh as compared with a Celtic skull.

It was a great day for Enniskillen and for the Enniskillen Guards, who were out in force. There were also pretty maidens from all the surrounding counties and not a few of the gentry who had been attracted by the jumping contests.

But—what a disappointment.

Irishmen? Why, you'll see more Irishmen any pleasant day below Fourteenth street in New York. And those that were there were so painfully well-behaved and quiet. And as for speaking the Irish dialect—well, I wish that some of the Irish comedians who have been persuaded that Irishmen wear green whiskers would come over here and listen to Irishmen speak. They wouldn't understand them, they speak so like other people.

For ginger and noise and varied interests any New England cattle show has this one beaten to a pulp—if one may use so common an expression in a newspaper.

The noisiest things there were the bulls and they were vociferous and huge. But the men were soft spoken and there seemed little of the "Well, I sawn! I hadn't seen you for more'n two years. How's it goin'?" "Oh, fair to middlin'." Able to set up an 'eat spoon vittles' atmosphere in the place although undoubtedly it was a great gathering of people who seldom met. Not a single side show. Not a three-card monte man or a whip seller or a vendor of non-intoxicants. Yes, there was a wagon where they sold tea.

There was just one man selling what must have been mock oranges, for such mockeries of orange groves I never saw. They were the size of peaches and the engineer told me they were filled with dusty pulp.

I bought none.

The racing and fence jumping in the afternoon were interesting but there was no wild Yankee excitement on the part of the crowd and no hilarity. There was only one man that I noticed as having taken more than was necessary and the only effect it had on him was to unlock the flood gates of an incoherent eloquence that caused a great deal of amusement to those who were able to extricate a sequence of ideas from the alcoholic froth of words.

One venerable looking man with a flowing white beard of the sort formerly worn by Americans of the requisite years fell from a fence where he was viewing the jumping and was knocked out for a time. He had been "overcome by the heat" at which, out of respect to him, I took off my overcoat. The Irish idea of heat is different from the New York one.

The splendid old fellow had served 33 years on the police force and had been a police pensioner for 31 years and as he must have been 21 when he joined the force he was upwards of 85.

Would Edward Everett Hale view a race from a picket fence? There is something in the Irish air conducive to longevity. In the evening I saw the old man standing in the doorway of a temperance hotel talking with some 70 years younger than he.

A local tradesman told me that in the town of Enniskillen where formerly any public gathering was sure to be followed by a public fight, he had seen the Catholic band and the Orangemen's band playing amicably the same tune (I'll bet it wasn't "The Wearing of the Green"), as they marched side by side up the main street.

The world do move.

FOR A FRIEND

By EMMA C. DOWD

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

As Helen Sargent stopped singing a sweet voice from the other end of the room said: "That is a beautiful song, dearie. It seemed as if I could see the Lord riding into Jerusalem, and the people casting their garments and palm branches before Him, and hear them crying, 'Hosanna!' You make it all so real."

"I am glad you like it, grandma. I feel as if I were there myself; perhaps that is why I can make it seem real to others. I am to sing it at church to-morrow and I hope it will please my audience as well as it pleases you. But not everybody is as kind a critic as you are." Then stooping to kiss the smiling lips she sped up-stairs.

The flush that her grandmother's words had called to her cheeks had not died out, and her face reflected the pure joy that filled her heart. Helen Sargent was very lovely as she stood there thinking her happy thoughts.

Presently she turned from the window and made preparations for a walk.

As she was ushered into the parlor of her friend, Mabel Emory, she saw that another caller was before her.

"Oh, it is Millie Crawford!" she said sweetly, as she went forward to greet the girl, who had turned slightly at her approach. "I have hardly caught a glimpse of you since I came home; but we used to be good friends before I went abroad. I wish I might see more of you. I never forget old friends, Millie."

The young lady thus addressed replied somewhat stiffly to this cordial greeting and then sat awkwardly on the edge of a large chair, nervously fidgeting the buttons of her jacket. "What ails Millie Crawford?" asked Helen as soon as she was alone with her friend.

"What Ails Millie Crawford?"

Mabel blushed. "Poor Millie!" she said; "she is going through a hard place."

"Oh, I did not suppose she was in trouble! I am so sorry. I wish I could help her."

Helen's voice was very tender and sympathetic, and she looked inquiringly at Mabel, expecting something further. But Mabel only seemed confused, and she avoided her friend's direct gaze.

"I'd like to tell you—that is, perhaps it would be best," she said, finally; "but I don't think Millie would want me to speak of it."

"Then do not," Helen hastened to say. "I only wish I might be of use to her in some way."

Mabel opened her lips, as if to reply; then she closed them tightly, with a pained expression, and the pain did not wholly leave her face during her caller's stay.

On Monday morning she started for Boston on business for her grandmother. As the train stopped at a way station, Helen looked up from her book to see a rosy-cheeked, smiling woman standing opposite her in the aisle, and she moved closer to the window and took up the parcel beside her that the stranger might share her seat.

"Thank you," said the woman; "I don't see what makes the cars so crowded this mornin'. But I don't blame 'em any; it's pleasant enough to want to be goin' somewhere."

Helen nodded a smiling assent, and then resumed her reading. But in a moment she felt a soft touch on her sleeve.

"Excuse me," said her seatmate, "but I couldn't help seein' that," pointing to the ticket that lay in Helen's lap, "an' I want to know if you live in Bloxamboro."

"Yes."

"I thought so! Wal, I'm real glad. Perhaps you know a young lady by the name of Crawford?"

Helen responded in the affirmative. "Wal, ain't I in luck! You see, I live in Boston. I've been over to my married daughter's to stay all night. Her baby has got the measles, an' they thought he was goin' to die sure, an' nothin' would do but I must come right over. But he's as bright as a button this mornin', an' these wif'n's no need o' my goin'; only I s'pose Mary 'll feel easier now. Wal, that ain't here nor there. This Miss Crawford come to my house the other day to see about hirin' some rooms for herself an' mother, an' I felt a little shaky 'bout lettin' her have 'em, seein' I didn't know nothin' whether she was reliable or not; but if you say she is, why that settles it."

Upon hearing Helen's assurance that Miss Crawford and her mother would probably be all that could be desired as tenants, the woman went on:

"I s'pose I needn't be so fussy, but I hain't lived in Boston long enough to git used to city ways, an' I'm drotful afraid I shall git took in by somebody. I thought she was all right; she seemed so pretty appearin', an' I felt real sorry for her. You see, there's a rich girl there in Bloxamboro that's been playin' the mischief with her prospects, gittin' her music scholars away from her—or no, not gittin' 'em away 'xactly, 'cause she said she didn't b'lieve she had anything to do about it, only they thought 'twas toner to take lessons o' this big git that had been to Europe an' had got all the new fangled notions in singin'."

An' she said she spent 'most all her mother's money leavin' how to sing, an' now it wa'n't goin' to be worth much to her after all. She cried when she was tellin' me, an' I felt awful sorry for her. Oh, an' she said she had a good place in the church choir, an' she was took down with typhoid fever just before this rich I-for-get-her-name come home, an'—as luck would have it—her time run out before she got well enough to sing, an' the other girl got married, an' so they up an' hired this rich girl—they'd got to have somebody, you see, an' she was all ready an' waitin'! But she said she could 'a' stood that if she could 'a' kep' her scholars; but all her best ones went over to the other one. It does seem as if anybody'd had plenty o' money wouldn't do such things, don't it? But, there, p'rhaps you know that rich girl, too—my, I hope she ain't no friend o' yours! I never thought!"

How Helen Sargent managed to reassure her garrulous companion she hardly knew; but that the mind of the little woman was relieved of all fears was evident from the unsuspecting way in which she continued her innocent chatter about herself, her relatives, Millie Crawford and the things that made up the daily routine of her own uneventful life.

As for Helen, her brain whirled, her heart beat wildly, she felt suffocated. This, then, was the explanation of Millie's trouble, of Mabel's strange conduct—and she was the cause of it all!

Helen was glad when she bade the well-meaning little woman good-by, and she was once more left to herself. After attending to her grandmother's business she had expected to spend a few hours in shopping and paying two or three visits, but her interest in new gowns and her Boston friends was gone, and she took an early train for home.

In her own room she first dared to look at the matter squarely. It was all plain enough now, this trouble of Millie's. Mrs. Crawford was in poor health, probably not well enough to be left alone—that was why Millie had been looking for rooms in Boston. She recollected hearing Millie once say that she believed it would break her mother's heart if she should ever have to leave her own little home where she had gone as a bride, and which she loved so dearly.

Helen's form shook with suppressed sobs. She prayed and prayed for light and strength.

At last, the struggle was ended; Helen grew calm. She rose and made preparations for going down to tea. When she looked into the mirror to see if she could discover any traces of her recent tears, it was not an unhappy face that greeted her.

Two years afterwards she was returning home from Boston late one afternoon when she caught the earnest gaze of a woman across the aisle. The face had a familiar aspect, but before she could recollect where she had seen it the woman came toward her with outstretched hand.

"I do know you, you know me, but I hain't forgot you—oh, now you remember!" pleased at Helen's smile of recognition. "Wal, I've looked for you ever since. Do you know, that Miss Crawford didn't come after all, an' I never knew why till a little while ago. I met her an' she told me all about it. That rich girl went off travellin', an' so she got her place in the choir back again an' her scholars an' ev'rythin'! Wasn't that nice? An' that rich girl—why, she's turned out 'most an angel! She's got piles o' money of course, but 'tain't ev'rybody 'll do things for nothin' if they have. She's givin' lessons all the time to poor girls that want to learn to sing an' can't afford to, an' she sings in prisons an' hospitals an' awful old tenement houses, an' they say she does sing beautiful. I'd just like to see her an' hear her sing; I'd walk five miles any time to do it! Oh, dear, here's Shir-ton, and I've got to go! Won't you come an' see me sometime? I'm in the same old place. Queer, how things turn out, ain't it? Do come see me!"

And Helen promised. Then the train stopped, and the nodding, smiling little woman disappeared in the crowd.
